A BANK REPORTS THE LIFE ABOUT IT

Loans and Investments on Which Condition of a Bank Depends Determined by the Kind of Business Surrounding It

TYPICAL and popular misconception found banking are due to the fact that the public does not realize the people themselves do that condition of banking offices depends upon the kind of loans and investments they make and the conditions other than those of the bank which surround them. For instance, Francis H. Sisson, president of the American Bankers Association, points out that the character of an institution's loans and investments indicates whether it is in the farm regions, a manufacturing town, a mercantile or shipping or a great financial district. Sisson also says that studying the institution as to its loans is a study of conditions with especial reference to the surrounding territory. Bankers' bank's note bill states that all loans rise and fall with the normal cycle of production and trade. Loans, as a matter of opinion, it may be taken as an index of economic activity. Bank loans are seasonal, that is, every autumn, when crops are moved, and winter, when industry is active, loans have a distinct trend that may be traced from year to year. Loans are extended or being reduced according to business activity. Generally speaking, the loans are not paid at maturity but are ultimately renewed, and while some loans may have to be taken as additional security, these too have expansions and influences, reflecting perhaps crop failures, overproduction or inefficiency, but most banking methods in a highly competitive national or world market, such as wheat. Inevitably all these are reflected in the condition of local banks.

Father DARKLEAF'S Column

BY C.H.R.

These modern youngsters have missed a lot in life if they've never sat with their feet in a pan of hot water. . . . as old-time remedy for most any ailment from toothache to a sore toe.

• • •

And speaking of a pan of hot water . . . that takes us back to the old-fashioned Saturday night bath.

• • •

No 'bath-tub and bottle-fed kid can ever realize what an exciting time Saturday night used to be!

• • •

When the hot water for washing supper dishes had all been used, the kettle was refilled and put back on the stove, to all knew what was coming!

• • •

Somewhere between the eventful hours of eight and nine o'clock, one by one the family would go through the ordeal of bathing in a wash pan.

• • •

You young'uns who think static, finger waves and runs in hose are the chief perplexities . . . you've never had to scrub your lumbar vertabrae with a pan of water for a bath-tub!

• • •

Nowadays they have bath-salts, back-sponges with handles and floating animals to make the morning bath something to look forward to. They used to have a two-hundred man puzzling whether to sit down, stand up or squat over a basin while he scrubbed his lips and nobody knew whose wash-rag was whose!

• • •

But it was worth it all to get to go to church Sunday morning spick and span . . . you (maybe) know . . . high-top shoes . . . "store" collar and any man or boy who sat on the ladies side of the church was forever afterwards a "sissy." Nothing else.

• • •

How many of my readers ever had a private tutor? Or went to one of the old-time academies?

• • •

Whatta jump, from the modern college with its football glamor, mighty gymnasiums, vast libraries and co-ed dances, back to the old academy of the 1870's.

• • •

Father Darkleaf is no old-timer to be able to recall such things—but I onct dilly-dallied intellectually with a private tutor for a year.

• • •

And I once knew the late Mr. Larkin Willis, who ran a splendid private boy's academy at Locust Dale, in Madison Co., Va.

• • •

Mr. Willis once told of an experience with a preacher I've never forgotten. Many a night he'd eaves-drop around the boy's quarters and foretell their practical jokes. Once they planned in deep secret to steal out at midnight and take Mr. Willis' great carriage and pull it about two miles down to the Robinson River (There really is a Robinson River in Virginia, flowing into the famous Rapidan) and hide it. Whatta joke it would be the next morning. Well they got the carriage and puffed and panted for two miles up and down hill and finally got the carriage and near the river. Then they sat down to rest and giggle awhile before returning. Then suddenly and ominously Mr. Willis himself arose from the dark of the rear seat of the carriage and startled the boys with, "Well, you've pulled me down here, now you might as well pull me back!"

• • •

Yep, them war the days!

• • •

Two weeks ago we wrote in this pillar of our own fishing deficiency. Father Darkleaf had returned from a scaleless expedition to the heralded waters of the Rappahannock. Now comes Dad with a letter describing his own own luck. He says he pulled in forty nice three-pounders in less than two hour's sport, while mother, bless her, caught eight! There ain't no pisqine justice. If I had been Jonah I wouldn't have seen a tad-pole and would have been as forgotten as Hoover's promise of two cars

Only Three More Weeks Before Primary

With but three weeks remaining before the Democratic primary to select a nominee for the governorship of Virginia, the forces of George Peery, of Tazewell, foresee a victory for their candidate.

Opposed by W. Worth Smith Jr., of Louisa, and Joseph T. Deal of Norfolk. Mr. Peery has waged an active speaking campaign and has carried his platform into virtually every section of the state.

Backed by senator Harry Flood Byrd and many of the present state administration, Mr. Peery is recognized as the probable winner in the primary and will no doubt oppose Fred McFarlane, of Lynchburg, Republican, in the fall election. He has an active organization in every county and city in the state and the next three weeks will be marked by an effort to arouse interest to get the voters to the polls on primary day.

State senator Samuel L. Ferguson, of Appomattox, yesterday offered to vote for a resolution whereby members of the general assembly of Virginia would refuse to accept pay for serving in the special session called August 17 to consider beer and relief legislation.

He suggested that this would be the best way to guarantee a short session with immediate legislation and that the plan would save the state costs of the session, which would run from $25,000 to $50,000 even with previous suggestions that legislators be paid only for cash actually served.

Rising Price On Wheat Is Boost To The Farmer

With visions of $1.00 wheat finally a reality, farmers in this section are turning to marketing of the crop just harvested with enthusiasm. RAfter several years of wheat as low as 40 cents, the boost in price is most welcome.

Much of the wheat harvested is being ground into flour for local consumption, but farmers are managing to sell a portion of their harvest to secure a little ready cash money. Among those paying $1.00 for wheat this week was the Taylor Co., Prospect.

Local Chapters Make Good Show In Competition

The Appomattox-Pamplin department of vocational agriculture returned with the state in competition with 120 other schools, according to Dr. W. S. Newman, State Supervisor, with a score of 88.5%.

At the close of each fiscal year, July 1, each department is rated upon the performance for the current year. Such important phases of the State program of work as enrollment, the supervised home training program, professional improvement, classroom instruction, F. F. A., and community activities are considered in this scoring plan.

The annual state conference of agriculture instructors was held at Virginia Beach during last week in the week in June. R. W. Wilkins, local instructor, was in attendance. At these meetings the results of the preceding year's work is discussed, a program of work for the coming year is planned, various speakers are heard from and specialists appear on the program to keep the group informed as to new developments in their fields.

Local instructors in the nearby counties plan to meet in the near future to plan a cooperative program of work for the Hub Federation, and discuss ways and means of improving their score card rating for the ensuing year.

Supervisors Refuse To Accept Auditing Bill

Charged $550.63

Taking a position in line with that of a number of Virginia counties, the board of supervisors of Appomattox county yesterday refused to pay a bill of $550.63 rendered by the state auditor for auditing the books of the county in the fall of 1931.

The audit of this county was made from the office of T. Coleman Andrews, and although the audit was made in 1931, the bill was not rendered until recently.

In 1929 the audit of county books cost $48.51 and in 1930 it cost $37.69. The supervisors felt that the jump to $550.63 for a similar audit was unreasonable and placed an unfair burden upon the county budget. W. M. Abbitt and C. W. Smith, commonwealth's attorney and clerk of the county were named to draw up a resolution stating the reasons for not paying the bill.

On February 8, 1932 C. W. Smith, county clerk, wrote Mr. Andrews asking for a statement of the bill for the auditing of the previous fall, as the county budget was then being drawn and the supervisors needed to know all outstanding items. On February 15 he wrote again, the first letter having been unanswered. Mr. Andrews then replied that bills for auditing county books had not been prepared but that he believed that the Appomattox bill would be around $400. A new system gotten up by Mr. Andrews had been installed and the auditors stayed in the county for some 33 hours of work or 23 and 3-8 days.

It appears that bills for the auditing of 1931 books were not sent out by Mr. Andrews during his entire tenure of office as state auditor. When T. McCarthy Downes succeeded Mr. Andrews he prepared the bills on the basis of Mr. Andrews' files.

Buckingham county was rendered a bill for some $1,950 for its audit of 1931, and promptly refused to pay it. Warwick, Spotsylvania and many other counties are likewise refusing to pay the bills.

Considerable agitation has been attracted to the costs of every county audits and the expensive systems he sought to install. Charges of from $200 up each are said to have been charged against the counties for installing these systems and every county budgets are prepared to pay the costs levied. it is said.

Bread Up 1 Cent

Home-made biscuits and old-fashioned corn bread may be in for a boom. The price of baker's bread advanced Monday of this week to six cents for the former five-cent loaf.

Due to a price increase in flour and the potential effect of the new wheat-processing tax, the bakers marked the price up one cent to the retail trade.

Appomattox Factory Makes Old-Time Night-Gowns

Appomattox is doing its bit to make America "night-gown conscious."

Some of us might have figured that the battle-royal between the old-fashioned nightgown and the modern pajama had already ended in victory for the bifurcated nethergarment. But not so! The old-fashioned night-gown is still a favorite.

The Appomattox Garment Factory is this week completing an order for well over 300 dozen night-gowns, the old time kind, made of flannel and aimed to prevent winter-time goose-pimples.

According to Willie Mitchell, manager of the local factory, which employes twenty-six girls, it takes from thirty to thirty-eight yards of flannel to make a dozen night-gowns.

The material for garments is shipped in bundles to Appomattox and then the process of making finished garments begin. First a pattern is drawn out. Mt. Mitchell does this on huge sheets of paper. Then the cloth is stretched out on a long counter. From one to three hundred thickness are placed ready for cutting. The pattern is placed on top and with a pattended machine, the cloth is cut from the pattern. Several hundred garments can be cut in a few minutes.

Then the cut-cloth is taken upstairs to the girl employees. The shop has thirty sewing machines as well as machinces to sew and make button-holes and sew on buttons.

This week the garment factory is turning out around fifty dozen completed garments each day. In addition to the above-mentioned order for night-gowns, the factory specializes in making ladies, misses and children's dresse.

To make dresses, patterns are drawn for each size ordered. About eighteen yards of material will make a dozen children's dresses. After the dresses are completed, which often includes belts and special trimming, the garments are assorted in boxes as to size and color, ready to be delivered by the manufacturer direct to the retailer.

The Appomattox Garment Factory consistently gives employment to a large force and is a decided credit to the town. The finished product it turns out is expertly made and ranks in high favor with buyers. Mr. Mitchell states that there is a decided up-trend in orders and that the factory is busier now than at any time this year.
